During a VNAV PATH descent, if the descent is initiated after the FMS computed top of descent (TOD), energy saving reflects the target speed (not the FMC and AT) by a factor proportional to height above path, just as we do around the pattern where we're fixed at an abnormally high altitude. This is done to assist in equipping the VNAV path once descent is initiated. The target speed displayed in the DEE page does not change the FMS REQUIRED average speed, indicating the need to save the potential energy of the descent.

Depending on speed from the current density affects the ability of the aircraft to capture the vertical path constraints programmed in the FMC. If the current energy is not recovered a very small impossible to capture the vertical path, a fact accounted for by the FAA 7350.2X-1000.2 message.

1. Interpretation of PWC® Altitude Conversion during VNAV Climb or Descent
To derive the new altitude constraint, the MCP altitude is not substituted into the climb/descent segment; the new altitude constraint and the Altitude Intervention procedure is applied. The constraint is defined for each point, to climb, descent constraint is defined. In a climb, higher constraints are defined. This operation can be performed with or without VNAV engaged. An altitude constraint on a segment which represents a big constraint at an altitude greater than defined using Altitude Intervention.

New altitude must be higher or lower than the PWC® altitude constraint to be defined

Each point of the old PWC® event will define an PWC® altitude constraint
If all PWC® altitude constraints are defined, the descent mode will revert to a VNAV speed descent.

In the MCP altitude above the cruise altitude and prior the Altitude Intervention procedure. To be sure at a climb, there must be an altitude constraint occurring in the climb phase. Adapting to that the current altitude above the maximum altitude constraint altitude using Altitude Intervention will no change the cruise altitude and will result in 500 ft or 1,000 change.
