1 An SRP binds to the signal peptide, halting synthesis momentarily.

2 The SRP binds to a receptor protein in the ER membrane. This receptor is part of a protein complex (a translocation complex) that has a membrane pore and a signal-cleaving enzyme.

3 The SRP leaves, and polypeptide synthesis resumes, with simultaneous translocation across the membrane. (The signal peptide stays attached to the translocation complex.)

4 The signal-cleaving enzyme cuts off the signal peptide.

5 The rest of the completed polypeptide leaves the ribosome and folds into its final conformation.

with a signal peptide, a series of amino acids that targets it for the ER. This figure shows the synthesis of a secretory protein and its simultaneous import into the ER. In the ER and then in the Golgi, the protein will be processed further. Finally, a transport vesicle will convey it to the plasma membrane for release from the cell (see Figure 7.10).

What determines whether a ribosome will be free in the cytosol or bound to rough ER at any given time? Polypeptide synthesis always begins in the cytosol, where a free ribosome starts to translate an mRNA molecule. There, the growing polypeptide has to compete—unless the growing polypeptide itself can the ribosome to attach to the ER. The polypeptides of proteins that are marked by a signal peptide, which targets the protein to the ER, amino acids at or near the leading (amino) end of the polypeptide, is recognized as it emerges from the ribosome by a protein. This protein functions as a signal-recognition particle (SRP). In a receptor protein built into the ER membrane. This receptor is part of a multiprotein translocation complex. Polypeptide synthesis continues there, and the growing polypeptide snakes across the membrane into the ER lumen via a protein pore. The signal peptide is usually removed by an enzyme. The rest of the completed polypeptide, if it is to be secreted from the cell, is re-leased into solution within the ER lumen (as in Figure 17.21). Alternatively, if the polypeptide is to be a membrane protein, it remains partially embedded in the ER membrane.
