Divining Desire Liza Featherstone, 2018-02-15 Over the course of the last century the focus group has become an increasingly vital part of the way companies and politicians sell their products and policies Few areas of life from salad dressing to health care legislation to our favorite TV shows have been left untouched by the questions put to controlled groups about what they do and don't like Divining Desire is the first ever popular survey of this rich topic In a lively sweeping history Liza Featherstone traces the surprising roots of the focus group in early twentieth century European socialism its subsequent use by the Mad Men of Madison Avenue and its widespread deployment today She also explores such famous failures of the method as the doomed launch of the Ford Edsel with its vagina shaped radiator grille and the even more ill fated attempt to introduce a new flavor of Coca Cola which prompted street protests from devotees of the old formula As elites have become increasingly detached from the general public they rely ever more on focus groups whether to win votes or to sell products And in a society where many feel increasingly powerless the focus group has at least offered the illusion that ordinary people will be listened to and that their opinions count Yet it seems the more we are consulted the less power we have That paradox is particularly stark today when everyone can post an opinion on social media our 24 hour focus group yet only plutocrats can shape policy In telling this fascinating story Featherstone raises profound questions about democracy desire and the innermost workings of consumer society

Crossing Borders in Community Interpreting Carmen Valero-Garcés, Anne Martin, 2008-05-09 At conferences and in the literature on community interpreting there is one burning issue that reappears constantly the interpreter's role What are the norms by which the facilitators of communication shape their role Is there indeed only one role for the community interpreter or are there several Is community interpreting aimed at facilitating communication empowering individuals by giving them a voice or in wider terms at redressing the power balance in society In this volume scholars and practitioners from different countries address these questions offering a representative sample of ongoing research into community interpreting in the Western world of interest to all who have a stake in this form of interpreting The opening chapter establishes the wider contextual and theoretical framework for the debate It is followed by a section dealing with codes and standards and then moves on to explore the interpreter's role in various different settings courts and police healthcare schools occupational settings and social services

Emotional Design Don Norman,2007-03-20 Why attractive things work better and other crucial insights into human centered design Emotions are inseparable from how we humans think choose and act In Emotional Design cognitive scientist Don Norman shows how the principles of human psychology apply to the invention and design of new technologies and products In The Design of Everyday Things Norman made the definitive case for human centered design showing that good design demanded that the user's must take precedence over a designer's aesthetic if anything from light switches to airplanes was going to work as the user needed In this book he takes his thinking several steps farther showing that successful design must incorporate not just what users need but must address our minds by attending to our visceral reactions to our behavioral choices and to the stories we want the things in our lives to tell others about ourselves Good human centered design isn't just about making effective tools that are straightforward to use it's about making affective tools that mesh well with our emotions and help us express our identities and support our social lives From roller coasters to robots sports cars to smart phones attractive things work better Whether designer or consumer user or inventor this book is the definitive guide to making Norman's insights work for you

Decoding Technology Acceptance in Education Caroline Stockman, 2017-08-07 The process of integrating technology into education often overlooks that technology is a sign it is not a neutral message conveyor but rather a material artefact placed into a context inevitably subject to culture In an original and novel combination Decoding Technology Acceptance in Education brings together two academic domains not previously pursued together yet which diverge in many ways cultural studies and technology acceptance studies Drawing on empirical data Stockman demonstrates that teachers activate a meaning making process through encoding and decoding signs around technology as an artefact of culture and as a result their acceptance behaviour and decisions rely on the dynamics of the cultural whole to which they belong In this study technology acceptance is revisited as an issue of cultural negotiation the common approach which provides an instrumental view on technology as a neutral tool is insufficient for the topic of technology acceptance Rather than proposing yet another model of technology acceptance Decoding Technology Acceptance in Education offers a renewed frame of mind and the conclusions it provides are of vital importance to the theoretical and practical advancement of technology acceptance studies as well as to the practical integration of technology into education Providing original empirical evidence for the influence of culture on educational decision making the book raises awareness for the importance of cultural research in areas where it has been under considered This book will be of great interest to researchers academics and postgraduate students engaged in the study of technology acceptance and technology use in education as well as those interested in cultural studies
