1 An SRP binds to the start codon, halting synthesis momentarily.

2 The SRP binds to a receptor protein in the ER membrane. This receptor is part of a protein complex (a translocation complex) that has a membrane pore and a signal-cleaving enzyme.

3 The SRP leaves, and polypeptide synthesis resumes, with simultaneous translocation across the membrane. (The signal peptide stays attached to the translocation complex.)

4 The signal-cleaving enzyme cuts off the signal peptide.

5 The rest of the completed polypeptide leaves the ribosome and folds into its final conformation.

What determines whether a ribosome will be free in the cytosol or bound to rough ER at any given time? Polypeptide synthesis always begins in the cytosol, where a free ribosome starts to translate an mRNA molecule. There, the growing polypeptide has no chance to attach to the ER. The polypeptides of proteins that are bound to the endomembrane system or the secretion apparatus are marked by a signal peptide, which targets the protein to the ER. (Figure 17.21). The signal peptide, a sequence of about 20 amino acids at or near the leading (amino) end of the polypeptide, is recognized as it emerges from the ribosome by a protein-RNA complex called a signal-recognition particle (SRP). This particle functions as an adaptor that brings the ribosome to a receptor protein built into the ER membrane. This receptor is part of a multiprotein translocation complex. Polypeptide synthesis continues there, and the growing polypeptide snakes across the membrane into the ER lumen via a protein pore. The signal peptide is usually removed by an enzyme. The rest of the completed polypeptide, if it is to be secreted from the cell, is re-leased into solution within the ER lumen (as in Figure 17.21). Alternatively, if the polypeptide is to be a membrane protein, it remains partially embedded in the ER membrane.
