Building Bridges Embracing Better Mediation:

Building Bridges: Embracing Nlp for Better Mediation Trevor Horne, Florence Dambricourt, 2015-11-29 Mediation can be so much more successful when success is measured not as arriving at an enduring negotiated settlement but as one that is entirely aligned or congruent with all parties as individuals It is as a generalisation a lack of communication that leads two parties to seek the assistance of a mediator in the first place But mediators are not immune from the same behaviour and responses Instead of two people distorting generalising and deleting information there are then three Given that situation it is a wonder that mediation works at all One reason for its success is that mediators learn to trust the mediation process and in keeping out of the content or issues of the dispute they avoid miscommunicating through weak listening This is where Neuro Linguistic Programming or NLP comes in and in this book we offer a working introduction to the powerful theories and techniques of NLP that are already in use in many areas of people s lives In NLP for instance a state of congruence is a result of all of a person s internal beliefs strategies and behaviours being in full agreement and oriented towards securing a desired outcome In other words all people in the dispute have their minds and bodies and some would say soul aligned with the final outcome the negotiated agreement We show how mediation isn t confined to those who are trained to practise Parents find themselves mediating often unknowingly between their children Friends often help mutual friends get over silly arguments Business leaders try to help employees and line managers resolve differences This book isn t just written for trained mediators then It is for all those who are interested in other people and more importantly the relationships people have with each other and themselves You have in your hands a book that is vital to what we need in the world today and something that can influence all of our lives and our children s lives in the future Enjoy it
