Engineering the Environment David P. D. Munns,2017-07-19 Promising an end to global hunger and political instability huge climate controlled laboratories known as phytotrons spread around the world to thirty countries after the Second World War The United States built nearly a dozen including the first at Caltech in 1949 Made possible by computers and other novel greenhouse technologies of the early Cold War phytotrons enabled plant scientists to experiment on the environmental causes of growth and development of living organisms Subsequently they turned biologists into technologists who in their pursuit of knowledge about plants also set out to master the machines that controlled their environment Engineering the Environment tells the forgotten story of a research program that revealed the shape of the environment the limits of growth and development and the limits of human control over complex technological systems As support and funding for basic science dwindled in the mid 1960s phytotrons declined and ultimately disappeared until nearly thirty years later the British built the Ecotron to study the impact of climate change on biological communities By revisiting this history of phytotrons David Munns reminds us of the vital role they can play in helping researchers unravel the complexities of natural ecosystems in the Anthropocene
