

Excellent education

Our overarching aim is that all autistic children and young people have an excellent and inclusive education that enables them to learn, thrive and achieve. Ultimately, this will support them to have a good quality of life, including the realistic prospect of living and working as part of their communities.

Our education settings remained open throughout the coronavirus pandemic. So, after 18 months of virtual, home-based learning, and social distancing, we were delighted to return to face-to-face learning for all pupils at The Priory School and The Five School and learners at Lakeside College. But the pandemic had not gone away and continued to disrupt the lives of autistic children and young people.

Despite this challenge, our education settings continued to work to the maximum and with all of our staff, pupils, learners and their families, we are committed to providing ongoing support in the aftermath of, and recovery from, the pandemic.

In this first year of our Time for Ambition strategy we made progress against the following objectives:

- We will continue to research, evaluate and refine our Ambition Approach, not it to improve our current education practice.

and support meaningful transitions and progress for autistic children and young people.

- We will share our model and expertise in autism education nationally through our policy and enhancing, individual, learning consistency and national upskilling work.
- Our priority is to support autistic children and young people to get through and recover from the coronavirus pandemic. We will ensure that we achieve positive outcomes through careers education, and support, and progress to education, employment or training.
- We will develop new education settings, including a new school in Kingston, and consider further opportunities for new education provision. Our guiding principle will be to ensure any new settings provide an excellent and inclusive education.

Creating the future for autistic children and young people

This year was dominated by the Government's publication of the long-awaited review of the special educational needs and disability (SEND) system.

Commissioned by the Treasury from the Department for Education in 2020, the SEND Review published its recommendations in early 2022.

We knew that it's critical to get the review of the SEND system right for autistic children and young people. Autism is the most prevalent primary mental health condition, with an Education, Health and Care Plan, a significant proportion of children receiving SEND support across schools.

In January 2022, we published our Five Years for the SEND Review based on the views of autistic children, young people and their families.

After the review was published, our first response was featured in the Guardian and on Channel 4 news.

During the consultation period, we held meetings for groups of pupils with officials from the Department for Education. Two autistic young people told their stories. Chloë, 16, and Sam, 14, shared their views.

We presented at a meeting of the early Parliament Group on Autism, which gave us another opportunity to share our views with the minister. We also spoke at sector events and conferences.

Our website and social media amplified autistic young people's voices, as we shared advice of their experiences and recommendations.

the SEND review Alice's story

Despite leaving the education system early, Alice is a young woman who is now working in a technology company. She is a member of the SEND review consultation group and has shared her views on the review. Alice is a young woman who is now working in a technology company. Employ Autism

Overview

- The Employ Autism programme is a national initiative to help autistic people find employment.
- The programme is run by the Department for Education and the Department for Work and Pensions.
- The programme is open to all autistic people aged 16 and over.
- The programme is free of charge.
- The programme is available in all parts of the country.
- The programme is available in all parts of the country.

The Employ Autism programme is a national initiative to help autistic people find employment. The programme is run by the Department for Education and the Department for Work and Pensions.

An important theme was the increased benefits of our offer to autistic young people, not only in the short term, but also in the opportunities that arise from a better quality of national disability partnerships.

The Employ Autism programme is a national initiative to help autistic people find employment. The programme is run by the Department for Education and the Department for Work and Pensions.

Understanding our strategy for partnership is key to understanding the needs and the multi-agency national assessment.

Our employer partners represent a range of industries including financial services, technology, manufacturing, transport, housing, health, social government, technology, media, IT, and marketing.

Last year, we also reached an additional 10 employer partners through our major Education network. We are proud that Employ Autism is now within reach of all autistic young people and their families.

Despite our governments, the impact pandemic continues to be felt, especially in the recruitment of young people. We returned to education last week, but we still have a long way to go to ensure a good quality of life for all autistic young people.

Some of the organisations that sign up to our programme have been key to the Employ Autism Development. There is a commitment group of business people about creating a supportive environment to recruit autistic people. Alongside this, our Business Ambassadors group has been a key part of the programme, as they have been able to offer information, advice, and support to autistic young people.

Health and wellbeing

Good physical and mental health and wellbeing are essential for an autistic child or young person to thrive. Right from the start, timely diagnosis followed by post-diagnostic support lays the foundations for understanding autism and how to achieve the right health care and support.

Autistic people also need support for autism (good mental health) by reducing isolation and early intervention through engaging in specialist support.

In this first year of our Time for Ambition strategy we have made progress against our objective to plan post-diagnostic support services so that all autistic young people can receive support to improve their wellbeing during and after diagnosis.
