The change, made by the Transportation Safety Board, will allow railroads to use their own safety programs to determine whether they are safe to operate. The board will also require railroads to report safety data to the board.

These findings are consistent with the idea that the observed differences in the effects of the two types of information on the two types of decisions are due to the different nature of the information. The results suggest that the two types of information are not equally useful for the two types of decisions.
