net.wars Wendy Grossman,2019-09-01 Assesses the battles over Internet regulation that will define the venue's future Who will rule cyberspace And why should people care Recently stories have appeared in a variety of news media from the sensational to the staid that portray the Internet as full of pornography pedophilia recipes for making bombs lewd and lawless behavior and copyright violators And for politicians eager for votes or to people who have never strolled the electronic byways regulating the Net seems as logical and sensible as making your kids wear seat belts Forget freedom of speech children can read this stuff From the point of view of those on the Net mass media's representation of pornography on the Internet grossly overestimates the amount that is actually available and these stories are based on studies that are at best flawed and at worst fraudulent To netizens the panic over the electronic availability of bomb making recipes and other potentially dangerous material is groundless the same material is readily available in public libraries Out on the Net it seems outrageous that people who have never really experienced it are in a position to regulate it How then should the lines be drawn in the grey area between cyberspace and the physical world
