

Writing Effective UCAS References

UCAS references can often be crucial in determining whether a university makes an offer to an applicant. Universities receive a high volume of applications and often have to make difficult decisions about very similar candidates. Providing an understanding of an applicant's achievements within their education and home context is important. Often the reference can be the one thing that sets an applicant apart from another. The universities rely on teachers, as educational professionals, to provide informed assessments of applicants.

Contextual Information

The school referee should always begin the reference with some contextual information about the school or college. The most useful is information that universities will not know from the UCAS form. For example, the proportion of students eligible for free school meals, the percentage who progress to Oxbridge or Russell Group universities, any resource or timetabling constraints – ones which might limit a student's choice in subjects to study, and the school's typical provision. It's therefore really important that the referee put the most relevant contextual information in the reference.

Structure

There is no set structure to a reference, however, universities recommend that it has a split of being 80% focused on academic information and 20% extra-curricular information. Also, the word limit is 4000 characters or 47 lines. The reference should include:

- > Background on the school and the applicant
- > Information on their academic performance at post-16
- > Subject by subject reports (with the most relevant subject first)
- > Information on their suitability for the course and higher education
- > Information on their extra-curricular activities and personality (relevant information)

Subject information should include:

- > Comments on the applicant's academic performance at post-16
- > Performance in relation to their peers – this is really helpful to universities
- > Any achievements and interest in specific modules
- > Academic qualities and skills
- > The student's potential for academic success at university
- > Super-curricular activities (extra activities directly related to their course of study)
- > Any explanations for predicted grades
- > The student's suitability for their chosen course
- > Explain any changes in their performance; universities will question a big jump from GCSE achievement to A Level predictions.
- > Include any mitigating circumstances – with the agreement of the applicant
- > Include if your school does not offer particular subjects, especially if it has affected that particular applicant
- > Make sure the style of writing is consistent throughout the reference
- > Provide evidence that the applicant is suited to the course
- > Build a picture of the student, including their approach to study
- > Include any involvement in outreach activities
- > Extract and combine information from subject teachers; e.g. "several teachers.."
- > Involve the applicant in the process

Teaching Business Sustainability Vol. 2 Chris Galea, 2017-09-08 If there is one area of business education that requires out of the box creative thinking it is sustainability Business sustainability because of its relative newness and hence uncertainty its dependence on interdisciplinary thinking its need to work with different stakeholders and its non traditional operating approaches demands that we train our managers in wholly new ways This need for new and non traditional teaching approaches is reflected in this collection of unorthodox teaching pedagogies The underlying philosophy behind them is that deep learning for sustainability needs ultimately to be experiential that is learning while doing rather than a passive absorption of facts and figures While much of the underlying theory of sustainability may be taught using more traditional lecture and reading approaches the implementation of true business sustainability requires students to experiment to win and lose while grappling with the myriad challenges and frustrations posed by sustainability the same challenges and frustrations one might add that companies intent on implementing sustainability face on a daily basis in the world in which they operate The aim is to create a learning environment where students themselves take control over their own learning This book a companion volume to Teaching Business Sustainability 1 From Theory to Practice Greenleaf Publishing 2004 focuses on four main categories of experiential pedagogy case studies hands on exercises role play simulations and active learning teaching exercises It includes contributions from a range of experts in global sustainability education who provide their expertise with class hardened teaching materials Teaching Business Sustainability 2 will be an invaluable resource both for educators working in a wide range of academic disciplines looking for inspiration and guidance on how to teach business sustainability as well as for organisations looking to reinvigorate internal management education programmes to factor in corporate responsibility and sustainability issues
