Darwin's Racism Leon Zitzer, 2016-06-10 Throughout the 19th century in the British Empire parallel developments in science and the law were squeezing Aborigines everywhere into nonexistence Charles Darwin took part in this Again and again he expressed his approval of the extermination of the native lower races The more interesting part of the story is that there were plenty of voices albeit a minority and mostly forgotten now who objected on humanitarian grounds and sometimes scientific grounds as well Europeans they said were becoming polished savages and dehumanizing the Other Darwin was very aware of this criticism and cared not one whit As he said in a letter to Charles Lyell I care not much whether we are looked at as mere savages in a remotely distant future But he well knew it was not a remote future He had read several writers who accused Europeans of being the real savages For a brief moment in his youth in his Diary he himself dabbled in such criticism even though he already believed in the inferiority of indigenous peoples That belief grew firmer as he matured Darwin did not dispute humanitarians so much as he ignored them Its a sad story But oh those humanitarians how they inspire

Zimmer ultimately unpacks urgent bioethical quandaries arising from new biomedical technologies but also long standing presumptions about who we really are and what we can pass on to future generations The British National
