

Les états financiers reflètent la performance et la situation financière d'une entreprise. Pour les sociétés cotées, soumises à la pression des marchés financiers, les besoins d'information des apporteurs de capitaux, actionnaires et créanciers sont privilégiés. Toutefois, tous les apporteurs de capitaux n'ont pas les mêmes besoins d'information. Les créanciers s'efforcent de déterminer le risque de défaillance de l'entreprise par l'analyse de sa situation financière et des équilibres financiers fondamentaux qui découlent de ses états financiers (section 1). L'analyse est complétée par la lecture du tableau de flux de trésorerie (section 2) et l'analyse des équilibres fondamentaux (section 3). Enfin, les actionnaires sont aussi intéressés par la rentabilité d'un investissement. Ils cherchent à identifier un certain nombre d'indicateurs pour évaluer la performance de leur entreprise (section 4).

1. Analyse des équilibres financiers fondamentaux

L'analyse financière opérée par un créancier consiste en un examen des équilibres financiers fondamentaux. Elle donne une première idée du risque financier représenté par l'entreprise. Le risque essentiel que les créanciers s'efforcent d'estimer est le risque de faillite. En effet, une entreprise peut être amenée à fermer non pas en raison d'un résultat déficitaire, mais par manque de trésorerie. L'étude de l'équilibre financier – reposant sur le besoin en fonds de roulement (BFR) et le fonds de roulement (FR) – permet de porter un jugement sur la trésorerie de la firme, sa politique financière et, par conséquent, sur les faits générateurs de risque de défaillance.

1.1. Besoin en fonds de roulement

L'analyse des besoins en fonds de roulement détermine les besoins de trésorerie à court terme de l'entreprise pour le financement de ses activités courantes. Il convient de distinguer les ressources financières selon qu'elles sont permanentes (fonds propres et dettes financières) ou courantes (dettes d'exploitation). Parallèlement, les besoins de financement permanents (actifs non courants) doivent être différenciés des besoins de financement courants (stocks et créances) (voir figure 10.1).

Équilibre financier : situation dans laquelle les ressources financières à long terme sont égales aux actifs à long terme.

BFR : le besoin en fonds de roulement (BFR) est la part, à une date donnée, des besoins ou emplois cycliques qui n'est pas financée par les ressources cycliques (cycliques s'opposant à stables).
