

NOTES ON THE SONGS AND ARIAS

SONGS

Dirge in Woods

Written especially in honor of Nadia Boulanger's fiftieth year of teaching.

Copland's "Dirge in Woods" (1934) was commissioned by his celebrated teacher, Nadia Boulanger, in honor of her fiftieth year of teaching. He chose poetry by Englishman, George Meredith. The musical setting is more complex than many of Copland's songs, offering something of a didactic study for his former teacher. The vocal line is rather angular and the tonal vocabulary challenging.

Old Poem

"Old Poem" (1920) shows the influence of Claude Debussy's music on the young Copland. His choice of Chinese poetry (translated by Arthur Waley) harkens back to Debussy's penchant for the exotic, and elements such as the "tail chords" (9th, 11th, 13th chords, etc.) in the piano accompaniment are a stylistic hallmark of impressionism.

Pastorale

"Pastorale" (1921) is a concise, uncomplicated song that reveals Copland's emerging fondness for open intervals, or fourths and fifths. The song's simple love poetry was translated from the Kokin Wakashū by E. Powys Mathers. In his autobiography/biography (co-authored with Vivian Perlis), Copland described an early performance of "Pastorale" by tenor Charles Hubbard with Nadia Boulanger at the piano as being his first experience of hearing his own music performed while he sat in the audience.

Poet's Song

For "Poet's Song," (1927) Copland chose poetry by e.e. cummings. Short, but very difficult and complex, the song reflects the influence of the Second Viennese School (Schoenberg, Berg, Webern). He revealed that the song was crafted from a twelve-tone row, but Copland did not strictly follow the formula associated with serialism. Copland wrote the song while staying with friends in British-occupied Germany, and it was the only composition that he completed that year (1927).

Vocalise

Expressing a desire to see more of America, Copland spent the summer of 1928 in Santa Fe, where he wrote his "Vocalise." In this song, the singer and pianist are treated as equals, often with the vocal line closely imitating the piano. The two parts are scored in the same register for much of the song, creating a frequent intertwining of the voice and piano. The accompaniment is rather sparse, often sustaining a single pitch or interval, while the voice elaborates.

Four Early Songs

Night

The first three of these early songs are set to the poetry of Copland's friend, Aaron Schaffer. "Night" (1918) expresses a colorful, evocative tonal palette. Copland's ease of writing for the piano shows, and the accompaniment is sometimes complicated.

A Summer Vacation

Copland's youthful exuberance is evident in this enthusiastic, extremely diatonic early song.
