

THE SPRINT REVIEW

One of the Scrum framework's five events is the Sprint Review. The Sprint retrospective is a meeting/gathering held at the end of each Sprint to assess the progress made by the Development Team during that Sprint. Members of the Development Team, Product Owner, the Scrum Master, and other stakeholders (including customers, users, and managers) are expected to attend the Sprint Review event.

The Development Team presents the work they've accomplished during the Sprint for review during the Sprint Review. This may take the form of demonstrations of newly implemented features, data displays, or code tours. The group also talks about the difficulties they faced during the Sprint and the lessons they were able to learn as a result.

The Sprint Review is where the Product Owner checks in on the product's development about Sprint's intended outcomes. In this way, everyone involved can see how far the product has come, what new features have been added, and how well the job has been done thus far. It also lets people with vested interests in the project's outcome weigh in on its course.

The Sprint Review's main purpose is to examine the increment and modify the Product Backlog as needed. After each Sprint, the Development Team and the people who were affected by the work discuss it together. The Product Owner can use this information to add or remove things from the Product Backlog ahead of the next Sprint.

THE SPRINT RETROSPECTIVE

As one of Scrum's five events, the Sprint Retrospective is meant to help teams reflect on their most recent Sprint progress. The Sprint Review is a time-limited meeting held at the end of every Sprint during which the team discusses its performance during the Sprint and brainstorms methods to improve. The Development Team, the Scrum Master, and occasionally the Product Owner all participate in the Sprint Retrospective meeting.

The Sprint Retrospective is the time when the team discusses how well they did during the Sprint by answering three questions:

- what worked successfully throughout the Sprint?
- what didn't go well during the Sprint?
- how can we make the most of the upcoming Sprint?

The group then examines the results of these questions, and decides what they can do differently in the next Sprint to achieve better results. The Scrum Master leads the conversation and directs the team's attention to problem areas.

Sprint Retrospectives are held primarily to foster a culture of constant enhancement. The team discusses the successes and failures of the previous iteration and then settles on specific next steps for advancement. The Scrum Master guides the group in determining the sources of issues and developing practical, measurable, and achievable solutions.

The Sprint Retrospective can also be used as a trust-building and team-bonding exercise. Communication and cooperation can be boosted when team members open up to one another about their personal experiences and perspectives.
