Abstract—A review of the literature on the effects of the environment on the development of children is presented. The review is organized into three sections: (a) the physical environment, (b) the social environment, and (c) the cultural environment. The physical environment section discusses the effects of air pollution, noise, and radiation on children's development. The social environment section discusses the effects of family structure, social class, and community on children's development. The cultural environment section discusses the effects of culture on children's development. The review concludes with a discussion of the implications of the research for policy and practice.
