

Warren Reeve Duchac Accounting 2e Answer Key

Showing differences come off their books as the underlying business transactions. All this creates is an artificial accounting for what's really going on. These sophisticated computer-based tools are applied not just to their accounts about the assets, liabilities, and equity that make up the balance sheet, but also to the underlying business transactions. This is why the accounting system is so important. It's not just about the numbers, it's about the story they tell.

It's important to know that the numbers on the balance sheet are not the same as the numbers on the income statement. The balance sheet shows the company's financial position at a specific point in time, while the income statement shows the company's performance over a period of time.

It's also important to know that the numbers on the balance sheet are not the same as the numbers on the cash flow statement. The cash flow statement shows the company's cash inflows and outflows over a period of time, while the balance sheet shows the company's financial position at a specific point in time.

Chapter 2: Accounting and the Accounting Cycle. The accounting cycle is a series of steps that companies use to record and summarize their financial transactions. The cycle starts with identifying the transactions, then recording them in the journal, then posting them to the ledger, then preparing the trial balance, then adjusting the entries, then preparing the financial statements, and finally closing the books. The cycle is a continuous process that repeats itself every year. The accounting cycle is a fundamental part of accounting and is used by all companies to record and summarize their financial transactions.
