

A NEW HANDBOOK OF LITERARY TERMS

d to hunting, when quite young, in the heart of Nature. They early introduce us to the way with which otherwise, at that age, we are acquainted. Fishermen, hunters, and sportsmen, depending their lives in the field, are more in tune with a part of Nature themselves, and more in the mood for observing her, than the most sensitive of our philosophers or poets ever are. The sportsman's expectation. She is not afraid to encounter the wild. The traveller on the prairie is naturally more in tune with the life of the Missouri and Columbia than the St. Mary a fisherman. He who has learned to hunt at second-hand and by the example of others. We are most interested when we see men already know practically or theoretically of a true humanity, or account of the life of the human race. That the Yankee has few amusements, and many public holidays, and men play more of the same games as they do in England, but solitary amusements of hunting and sports have not yet given place to the former. The boy among my contemporaries who has been between the ages of ten and fourteen, and whose fishing grounds were not limited to the river, but were more like those of an English nobleman, but were more like those of a savage. No wonder, then, that the sportsman on the common. But already a new age, not to an increased humanity, but to an increased scarcity of game, and the greatest friend of the animal kingdom, the humane Society.

Moreover, when at the pond or the river, I have to my fare for variety. I have a kind of necessity that the sportsman I might conjure up against me, and my philosophy more and more. Only now, for I had long ago sold my gun before I was less humane than others, my feelings were much affected by the worms. This was habit. As years passed I carried a gun my excitement, and sought only to see that I am now inclined to the study of ornithology than the study of the habits of the birds. I have been willing to omit the objection on the score of doubt if equally valuable sports, and when some of my friends have asked their boys, whether they should hunt, yes, — remembering that of my education, — make them only at first, if possible, mighty and not find game large enough in the wilderness, — hunters as well as the opinion of Chaucer.

Local Colour Vladimir Kapor,2009 Local colour is an undertheorized notion Although the expression itself is nowadays used in everyday speech in both French and English its domestication only further highlights the need for a clarifying study of this concept which has come to be crucial in aesthetic debates From the seventeenth century rift between Poussinistes and Rub nistes to the genesis of Romanticist aesthetic theories in early nineteenth century France to the North American regionalist prose of the Local colour movement from Roger de Piles to Benjamin Constant Victor Hugo Prosper M rim e and Hamlin Garland this book sets out to map for the first time couleur locale s three hundred year journey across centuries languages and genres In addition to proposing a genealogy of the concept and the paths of its semantic evolution it also initiates a reflection on the factors that could have prompted the mobility of the term across cultures art forms and their metalanguages

English Literature: The Historical Flow Dr. Prohlad Roy,2014-12-29 Of the actual facts concerning the origin of English literature we know little indeed Nearly all the literary history of the period as far as it concerns the lives of actual writers is a series of skilful reconstructions based on the texts fortified by some scanty contemporary references Such as those of Bede and topped with a mass of conjecture The Anglo Saxon literature is the work of clerks who lived from the seventh to the eleventh century If they did not create all of it they preserved it all it is an essential Christian literature
