Bite the Bullet Angela Louise McGurk, 2015-11-30 Let me tell you what it was to be made vampire It wasn't birth Birth implies pushing tearing forth into the light screaming Becoming immortal was to be pulled to be tugged irrevocably into darkness and it was silent I should have fought any person should fight but my mind had been filled with a hazy calm which forbade any battle Struggling had been the last thing on my mind even when my bus arrived and my assailant waved it on dismissing my last hope of escape Yet my lack of rebellion was far from the most unsettling part of the stranger's control over me The truth was that the man could've asked anything of me and I would've complied but he didn't need to vocalise his request I knew instinctively what he wanted I sighed and surrendered myself as he held me against his front in a lover's embrace tipping my head and willingly giving him access to my throat One day you'll understand he whispered his tone subdued I've often wondered since if he was really talking to me Perhaps he'd been talking to himself persuading himself that one day I'd know and accept his reasons for what he'd planned for me I wouldn't I couldn't Because when my fangs came in my world altered irrevocably It became somewhere dark somewhere filled with murder and blood where magic was sinister and where even my closest ally seemed more like an enemy Even if he did make my heart skip a beat Bite the Bullet
