Introduction

This is my third attempt to create an organized study guide for the BJCP exam. It is largely derived from Al Boyce's BJCP Exam for Dummies 2003 edition (which, in turn, was derived from materials prepared by Kristen England among others), but also incorporates training materials developed by Gordon Strong, Kevin Pratt and other BJCP Grand Master judges, discussions on the BJCP member forums, and my own experience and biases from past attempts at the exam.

While I am not a grand master judge, I'm shamelessly working to get there and getting that magic 90+% score is the first and critical step. Unlike most grand masters, I've taken the exam in the past few years, so I know what it's like to study for the exam in its current form. I've filled in gaps in my personal knowledge by hunting the BJCP forums and nagging more experienced judges for information.

Using the first, primitive version of this guide, with very little actual brewing or judging experience, I got a 73% on the written portion of my test the first time I took the exam. Using the second version of this guide, I got an 81% on the written portion of the exam on my second try at the exam, while my wife used it to get a score of 73% on her first try. For some questions, we got master level scores. I take that as a good sign.

If you are an intermediate (partial grain extract or beginning all-grain) brewer with a decent knowledge of styles and a bit of judging experience, my guess is that you can use this guide as a "crash sheet" and perhaps get a 60% or better if you also have time to study the BJCP Style Guidelines. If you spend 2-10 weeks studying the material in this guide, as well as the recommended study materials, there is no reason why you cannot score at least at 70% the first time you take the exam.

Supplemental Materials

The web is chock-full of study aids and other resources which will help you prepare for the exam. There are podcasts, flash cards (online and printable versions), spreadsheets, forums and mailing lists all dedicated to BJCP exam prep, as well as detailed websites and Wikipedia devoted to all aspects of beer tasting, judging and brewing. A web search using the terms "BJCP study materials," or the like, will turn up a host of goodies. As usual, Caveat Surfer.

Basic Texts

These books are all good, but each has its strong and weak points. Choose one or two as your basic guide for recipe formulation, troubleshooting and process.

- * The Complete Handbook of Home Brewing, Dave Miller. A solid, accessible book, but dated. Probably the least technical of the four recommended basic texts, so good for beginners.

- * Dave Miller's Homebrewing Guide, Dave Miller. Covers slightly different material than his Complete Handbook and in more depth. Somewhat dated.

- * Homebrewing Vol. 1, Al Korzonas. Detailed, extensive coverage of ingredients and equipment, massive amounts of information on beer faults. While it is thicker than any other the other books, and perhaps a bit intimidating to the beginner, it's the best of the four for troubleshooting.

- * How to Brew, John Palmer. Excellent for brewing process and recipe formulation, but probably the most technical
