My first experience with a 3D printer was in 2009, when I was a graduate student at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. I was part of a research group that was developing a new type of 3D printer that could print with a variety of materials, including plastics, metals, and even living cells. I was responsible for the design and construction of the printer's mechanical components, and I was also involved in the development of the software that controlled the printing process. It was a challenging and rewarding experience that gave me a deep understanding of the technology and its potential applications.
