The flowchart illustrates the Incident Management Process, starting with a user contacting the service desk or submitting a request form. The process flows through registration, assignment, and tracking. A decision point determines if change management is required. If yes, it goes to change management. If no, it proceeds to tracking and resolution by a specialist. From resolution, it can go to problem management or an escalation decision. If escalation is required, it goes to escalation handling, which then leads to a decision on the most efficient recovery site. Depending on this decision, it goes to either continuity or change management. Finally, the incident is closed, and the solution is approved, with feedback from change, release, and continuity management.
