

An abstract geometric painting by Piet Mondrian. The composition is dominated by a large, vibrant red square in the center. This central square is framed by a complex arrangement of black and white lines and shapes. A thick black line forms a rectangular border around the red square, with several smaller black rectangular blocks integrated into this frame. White lines of varying thicknesses create a grid-like structure, some of which intersect the black lines. The background is a light, off-white color, providing a stark contrast to the red and black elements. The overall effect is one of balanced asymmetry and primary color contrast.
