

Alien Encounters

Background: In their year 2000, scientists at the SETI Institute and the University of California, Berkeley, announced that they had discovered a signal from an alien civilization. The signal was a series of pulses that appeared to be coming from a star system about 150 light years away. The signal was detected by the SETI@home project, which is a distributed computing project that uses volunteers' computers to search for signals from alien civilizations. The signal was detected on August 15, 2000, and was named "Wow!" because of its strength and duration. The signal was detected by a radio telescope at the SETI Institute's Big Ear radio telescope in Ohio. The signal was a series of pulses that appeared to be coming from a star system about 150 light years away. The signal was detected by the SETI@home project, which is a distributed computing project that uses volunteers' computers to search for signals from alien civilizations.

Assignment: Write a story about the alien encounter. Use the information you have learned about the signal and the SETI@home project to create a story that is both interesting and informative. Your story should include the following information: the date and time the signal was detected, the location of the signal, the strength and duration of the signal, and the scientists' reaction to the signal. You may also include your own ideas about the signal and the alien civilization that sent it.

Think About It!

What questions do you have about the signal and the alien encounter?

After you complete this assignment...

Assignment Questions:

1. What does a signal strength of 100 mean? How does this compare to a signal strength of 1?

Answer: A signal strength of 100 means that the signal is 100 times stronger than a signal with a strength of 1. This means that the signal is much more likely to be detected by a radio telescope than a signal with a strength of 1.

2. If you have a particular amount of signal strength, how long will it take to receive a signal of that strength? (Hint: Use the formula $100 \times \text{time} = \text{signal strength}$.)

Answer: If you have a signal strength of 100, it will take 100 times as long to receive a signal of that strength as it would take to receive a signal of strength 1. For example, if it takes 1 hour to receive a signal of strength 1, it will take 100 hours to receive a signal of strength 100.

3. What is the difference between a signal strength of 100 and a signal strength of 1?

Answer: A signal strength of 100 is 100 times stronger than a signal with a strength of 1. This means that the signal is much more likely to be detected by a radio telescope than a signal with a strength of 1.

What are the differences between the signal and the alien? How does the signal differ from the alien?

Answer: The signal is a series of pulses that appeared to be coming from a star system about 150 light years away. The alien is a hypothetical being that sent the signal. The signal is a series of pulses, while the alien is a being.

What is the difference between a signal strength of 100 and a signal strength of 1?

Answer: A signal strength of 100 is 100 times stronger than a signal with a strength of 1. This means that the signal is much more likely to be detected by a radio telescope than a signal with a strength of 1.
