Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 12 weeks of no supervised walking. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The physical health outcomes measured were weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health outcomes measured were self-reported physical activity, self-reported health status, and self-reported mood. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on all of the physical and psychological health outcomes. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-reported physical activity, self-reported health status, and self-reported mood. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
