

1. What is climate change? Support its existence with data.

Support is given by several lines of evidence:

- (a) The observed warming of several other factors by individual data, such as rising sea levels.
- (b) Systematic increases in temperature, from measurements that range of values of degree, such as the melting of major rivers permafrost, and the rise of the global mean temperature.
- (c) Long-standing changes in the pattern of the atmosphere and the oceans in the past.

2. Transferring some carbon has been very critical to those who understand the consequences of climate, particularly plants. Define transpiration.

a. Photosynthesis

They differ in the way that photosynthesis is carried out. In photosynthesis, the light energy is converted to chemical energy, and the chemical energy is used to drive the synthesis of organic molecules.

b. Cellular Respiration

Cellular respiration is the process by which the chemical energy stored in organic molecules is released. This is done by breaking down the organic molecules into smaller molecules, such as glucose, and then using the energy from the breakdown to drive the synthesis of organic molecules.

c. Transpiration Process

Transpiration is the process by which water is lost from the leaves of plants. This is done by the evaporation of water from the stomata, which are small openings in the leaf surface.

d. Photosynthesis

Photosynthesis is the process by which the chemical energy stored in organic molecules is released. This is done by breaking down the organic molecules into smaller molecules, such as glucose, and then using the energy from the breakdown to drive the synthesis of organic molecules. The process is carried out by the chloroplasts, which are organelles found in plant cells.

e. Cellular Respiration

Cellular respiration is the process by which the chemical energy stored in organic molecules is released. This is done by breaking down the organic molecules into smaller molecules, such as glucose, and then using the energy from the breakdown to drive the synthesis of organic molecules. The process is carried out by the mitochondria, which are organelles found in plant cells.
