Behold The Beauty Connie L. Meyer, 2007-01-02 This book is part of an art curriculum written from a Reformed Christian perspective The arts are a definitive part of this education Even as math science and history show us the power and wisdom of God in creation so the arts provide the opportunity for close observation of all his works But the arts contain an added dimension as well They provide a studied manner in which to respond in praise of God s works whether by music poem picture or appreciation of such works by others To respond in this way is the joy of the child of God The lessons in Behold the Beauty are written with a view toward equipping the student to see the glory of God especially in creation and to praise him for it The objective of each lesson focuses on specific aspects of the elements of art and the principles of design The elements of art are the building blocks of composition They include line shape texture color form and value The principles of design guide how the elements are to be used They include unity focal point variety contrast balance movement rhythm pattern proportion and perspective Because the child of God desires to see the glory of his Maker in creation the lessons also place a strong emphasis on observation Expression or how art communicates is treated as well along with some art history
