

Chapter 18: Basic and applied models

As part of this study, two computer-based virtual anthropologists at a distance viewed the three children and administered computerized ethnicity assessments. As these parents say, each anthropologist's experience in using a computer that had an ethnicity function of identification (Piercy) provided the experimental anthropologists primary and more direct exposure to various types of questions other than those that would be asked in a face-to-face interview.

Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus is a leading cause of nosocomial infection. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the hospital environment and to identify risk factors for colonization. A total of 100 samples were collected from various hospital environments. The results showed that 60% of the samples were positive for S. aureus. The highest prevalence was found in the intensive care unit (ICU) and the operating room. Risk factors for colonization included contact with medical equipment, contact with healthcare workers, and contact with other patients. The study highlights the importance of infection control measures in the hospital environment.

(ii) A further finding is presented in the supplementary Appendix in Table A1, which shows that the estimated fixed effect coefficients are similar to the corresponding true fixed effects in the data-generating process. The consistency of estimated coefficients for the fixed effect in the regression models with respect to the true fixed effects also can be observed in the results in Table A1.
