Building Expertise Cognitive Methods For Training And Performance Improvement:

Building Expertise Ruth Colvin Clark, 2003 Building Expertise Ruth C. Clark, 2006-04-17 This third edition of the classic resource Building Expertise draws on the most recent evidence on how to build innovative forms of expertise and translates that evidence into guidelines for instructional designers course developers and facilitators technical communicators and other human performance professionals Ruth Colvin Clark summarizes psychological theories concerning ways instructional methods support human learning processes Filled with updated research and new illustrative examples this new edition offers trainers evidence based guidelines to help them accelerate genuine expertise within their organizations This new edition includes Eight instructional principles that can accelerate expertise Four instructional architectures to serve as design templates The most current research on how to develop learning that is both motivational and instructionally sound Completely updated review of relevant research from cognitive and instructional design fields Practical guidelines for problem centered instruction motivation and transfer Information on how to exploit the features of new technology in ways that support human learning processes Book jacket Building Expertise Ruth C. Clark, 2008-11-03 This third edition of the classic resource Building Expertise draws on the most recent evidence on how to build innovative forms of expertise and translates that evidence into guidelines for instructional designers course developers and facilitators technical communicators and other human performance professionals Ruth Colvin Clark summarizes psychological theories concerning ways instructional methods support human learning processes Filled with updated research and new illustrative examples this new edition offers trainers evidence based guidelines to help them accelerate genuine expertise within their organizations Encyclopedia of Distance Learning, Second Edition Rogers, Patricia L., Berg, Gary A., Boettcher, Judith V., Howard, Caroline, Justice, Lorraine, Schenk, Karen D., 2009-01-31 Offers comprehensive coverage of the issues concepts trends and technologies of distance learning An Appraisal of Batswana Extension Agents' Work and Training Experiences Rebecca N. Lekoko, 2002 Hermeneutic phenomenological interviews were conducted to explore community based extension workers CBEWs previous work and training experiences and how such experiences contributed to their present working relationships as partners in community development CBEWs responses foreshadowed challenges and problems of coordination that could have otherwise been addressed had they been considered integral elements of previous training curricula The findings throw light on how government policies though explicitly formulated to enhance conditions of service coordination can be in variance with realities of coordination at the village level Awareness of the fissure of policies and actual coordination does not refute the importance of government intervention in community development given CBEWs status as government employees Rather it is only with understanding of and familiarity with CBEWs circumstances that such policies would truly address the challenges problems and possibilities of effective coordination CBEWs comments reflected both awareness and learned understanding of social and political complexities surrounding their work as partners in community development Authority and interventions such as political interference illiterate communities enlightened communities and passive and negative attitudes complicate their working together resulting in problems of resistance rejection and other tensions that defeat the spirit of working together Meaningful acceptance of community development as a collective undertaking needs to be backed by a deliberate unification of CBEWs through centrally organized training Such training programs must not only illuminate the lived experiences of CBEWs as they work among themselves and with other community based groups in the villages but also provide opportunities for CBEWs to take active roles by engaging in activities such as placements in authentic work settings mini interdisciplinary groupings of CBEWs with local communities and other team activities There will be no end to the reservoir of learning if intentional efforts are made to incorporate local knowledge and needs that is immediate challenges problems and needs of CBEWs as they work with the local communities Further effective coordination requires basic skills of communication leadership and management personal and human relations technical skills and relevant attitudinal orientations The features described here are not exhaustive but have in common the intent of making training programs truly sensitive to CBEWs needs as partners in community development
