

The background of the cover is a photograph of an ancient stone structure, likely a monolith or part of a larger ruin. The structure is made of large, rectangular stone blocks. In the center, there is a large, carved stone face or mask. The face has large, circular eyes, a wide nose, and a mouth. The stone is weathered and has a reddish-brown hue. The background is dark and moody, with some light reflecting off the stone surfaces. The title text is overlaid on the top half of the image.

Vaughn,2012-12-09 Over the millennia from stone tools among early foragers to clays to prized metals and mineral pigments used by later groups mineral resources have had a pronounced role in the Andean world Archaeologists have used a variety of analytical techniques on the materials that ancient peoples procured from the earth What these materials all have in common is that they originated in a mine or quarry Despite their importance comparative analysis between these archaeological sites and features has been exceptionally rare and even more so for the Andes Mining and Quarrying in the Ancient Andes focuses on archaeological research at primary deposits of minerals extracted through mining or quarrying in the Andean region While mining often begins with an economic need it has important social political and ritual dimensions as well The contributions in this volume place evidence of primary extraction activities within the larger cultural context in which they occurred This important contribution to the interdisciplinary literature presents research and analysis on the mining and quarrying of various materials throughout the region and through time Thus rather than focusing on one material type or one specific site Mining and Quarrying in the Ancient Andes incorporates a variety of all the aspects of mining by focusing on the physical social and ritual aspects of procuring materials from the earth in the Andean past
