The Charade Laura Lee Guhrke, 2010-11-23 Honor freedom liberty those were mere words to Katie Armstrong a savvy thief and indentured servant on the run in colonial Boston For the sake of survival she agreed to a British lord's bribe unmask the identity of the patriot known as John Smith or be returned to her brutal master But soon the cagey John Smith was making the same threat unless she spied for him Katie planned to play both men against each other until masquerading as Smith's mistress she lost her heart to the seductive stranger she had set out to undo Ethan Harding's steely heart was ready to risk anything to end British tyranny even if it meant taking on the false identity of John Smith putting his own life in jeopardy or blackmailing a beautiful and terrified young woman And if that woman's angelic face made other men spill their secrets so much the better But now Katie Armstrong's charms were about to betray his heart and his cause and his desire for the elusive temptress would turn the tables on everyone and everything he had pledged to protect Heavenly Thoughts Kenneth E. Straight, 2025-09-23 While I was growing up I used to write my own cards for everyone but I never thought my poetry was any good But my mom always loved what I wrote she always looked forward to getting my homemade cards for her I would do my own drawing for the cards and then I would write my own message on it for the occasion I always loved to draw and always got good grades in art class and all my drawing classes but when it came to my writings I never did very well and never think what I wrote was very good however all my family loved my writings and my cards As I grew up I tried to refine my writings to make them better but I still didn't think they were good until I entered a poetry writing contest and they chose to publish it Then with the next poem I entered in the next contest it got published again and also got me nominated for best poem and poet of the year I got nominated for best poem or poet of the year nine times in a row but I still never thought my poems were that good I love writing and drawing but I have gotten away from drawings with the poems on the cards But I have earned two degrees the main degree I want to use more than anything is my Architectural CAD Drafting and Design degree But I'm also more focused on my poetry to see how much people truly like them Most of my poetry is about God but also about missing my mom since she passed away from cancer when I was twenty years old I think missing my mom has helped me write better than ever
