

varied by pressing a string against the fingerboard with the fingers to change the length L of the vibrating portion of the string. Increasing the tension F increases the wave speed v and thus increases the frequency (and the pitch). All string instruments are “tuned” to the correct frequencies by varying the tension; you tighten the string to raise the pitch. Finally, increasing the mass per unit length μ decreases the wave speed and thus the frequency. The lower notes on a steel guitar are produced by thicker strings, and one reason for winding the bass strings of a piano with wire is to obtain the desired low frequency from a relatively short string.

Wind instruments such as saxophones and trombones also have normal modes. As for stringed instruments, the frequencies of these normal modes determine the pitch of the musical tones that these instruments produce. We’ll discuss

EXAMPLE 15.10 Tuning a guitar

Suppose you are tuning a guitar. You pluck a string and find that the frequency of the sound is 198 Hz, which is lower than the frequency of the note you want. You decide to tune the string by increasing the tension. (a) How much must you increase the tension to tune the string? (b) How much must you increase the tension to tune the string to 220 Hz?
