Adipose Tissue and Cancer Mikhail G. Kolonin, 2013-07-17 Recent studies have shown that cells from adipose tissue are capable of trafficking to tumors thus enabling paracrine action of adipokines from within the tumor microenvironment Increased tumor vascularization immune system suppression and direct effects on malignant cell survival and proliferation have been investigated as mechanisms regulated by adipokines The goal of this book is to discuss data pointing to the role of adipose tissue in cancer and to dissect individual mechanisms through which adipose tissue excess or restriction could influence cancer progression Obesity, Inflammation and Cancer Andrew J. Dannenberg, Nathan A. Berger, 2013-05-21 In addition to its metabolic and endocrinologic effects obesity and adipose tissue have now been shown to be associated with low grade inflammation resulting in cellular and humoral inflammatory factors of which the latter may act by endocrine paracrine and autocrine mechanisms These inflammatory mediators have increasingly been suggested as contributing to the obesity link to carcinogenesis and cancer promotion This volume of Energy Balance and Cancer will focus on recent developments and cutting edge research pointing to inflammation and inflammatory factors as key mediators of this linkage The volume first provides information on inflammation as an important link between obesity and insulin resistance which is in itself linked to promotion of cancer through hyperinsulinemia The volume then covers some of the most important mechanisms by which obesity leads to inflammation including the novel inflammasome concept alterations in chromatin structure circulating inflammatory factors unique cellular interactions between adipocytes and macrophages and the direct link of dietary fat to inflammation and cancer Overall this volume will provide important insight to help understand how inflammation may help modulate the linkage between obesity and cancer and serve as a platform for developing future research in this area Adipocytokines, Energy Balance, and Cancer Ofer Reizes, Nathan A. Berger, 2016-10-31 Adipocytokines provide the circuitry by which adipose tissue communicates among its component cells which include adipocytes stromal cells immune cells and vascular elements with adipose tissue depots in other locations throughout the body and with other tissues in order to regulate physiologic processes of energy intake utilization and distribution Since disturbances both qualitative and quantitative in adipocytokine function contribute significantly to many of the comorbidities associated with obesity including diabetes cardiovascular disease and cancer this volume which discusses most of the major adipocytokines independently and collectively and their roles in normal and pathologic processes should be useful to all individuals seeking a deeper understanding of these processes Moreover it provides a valuable complement to the series on Energy Balance and Cancer in which each volume is focused on a specific aspect of this process which now constitutes an expanding problem as the obesity pandemic continues and more of the population reaches the age where cancer is most prevalent This volume should provide a valuable resource to all clinicians and scientists engaged in caring for susceptible patients and in exploring the relation between energy balance and cancer as well as an important platform to providing the background for research development
