The enable password controls access to privileged mode. This is a very important password because when it is configured only those who know the password can make configuration changes in privileged mode.

There is a difference in the syntax used to set the password for a router and the syntax used to set the password for a switch. On the 1900 series switch, levels need to be set when a password is declared. The different levels allow different sets of people to enter different commands on the switch. The password levels range from 1 to 15. Level 1 allows the user to log in to the router and use very basic show commands. Level 15 allows the user to do anything. The levels in between can be set to allow the network administrator to allow certain commands. On a switch you can use the `enable password` command to set the password.

THE ONLY PROBLEM WITH THE ENABLE PASSWORD IS THAT IT APPEARS IN PLAIN TEXT IN THE SWITCH'S CONFIGURATION. IF YOU NEED TO OBTAIN ASSISTANCE WHILE TROUBLESHOOTING A PROBLEM YOU MAY INADVERTENTLY COMPROMISE THE SECURITY OF your system by revealing the password. Set the enable secret password to cisco. Do not forget to use the level commands.

```
Boson(config)#enable password
Boson#exit
Boson>enable
Password:

You can now test this password by logging out of the switch and then trying to access privileged mode. The enable secret password overrides the enable password. If you have set both passwords, the enable secret password is the password you should use to enter privileged mode. The enable password is now deactivated. Boson(config)#exit
