Saint Bartholomew's Hospital Reports, 1877, Vol. 13 (Classic Reprint) W. S. Church, 2016-12-19 Excerpt from Saint Bartholomew's Hospital Reports 1877 Vol 13 For whatever may be the true theory of the production of murmurs whether by uid veins or otherwise no one I imagine believes that a murmur can be produced at either auriculo ventricular orifice when the blood in it is at rest The existence of an endocardial murmur necessitates the simultaneous existence of some blood movement at the spot where it is produced But if the blood is in movement it must be passing either into or out of the ventricle if the former be the case the ventricle must be dilating if the latter it must be contracting for the blood never passes in a continuous stream through the ventricles as it does through the auricles All mitral and tricuspid murmurs must therefore be in the proper sense of the words either systolic or diastolic It makes no difference whether they occupy the whole or a part only of the systolic or diastolic periods their nature does and their name ought to depend upon the state of the ventricles at the time of their production and Upon this alone The words Systole and Diastole have primarily nothing whatever to do with the sounds of the heart which occupy a part only and a constantly varying part of these periods and the attachment of such reference to them by some writers is I know a frequent source of great confusion in the minds of students All murmurs then produced at the mitral orifice during the ow through it of blood into the ventricle are diastolic although in practice and for purposes of accurate diagnosis it is convenient to distribute them further into three main classes According to the portion more or less of the diastolic period which they may chance to occupy Thus a diastolic murmur at the apex may take place at the beginning or at the end or it may be prolonged throughout the whole of the diastolic period but in each case it remains equally and always diastolic To the murmur which occurs at the end of the diastole and often seems to be continuous with the first sound of the heart the name Praesystolic has been given and it would no doubt be highly inconvenient to relinquish a name sanctioned by long usage for a murmur which is generally of peculiar character and significance only be it always remembered that praesystolic are nothing more than one of the varieties of diastolic murmurs
