So Fly

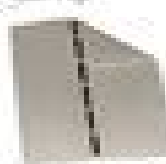

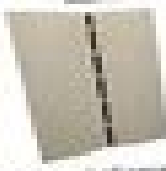

Having the best paper airplane involves experimenting with different folding techniques and making small changes to get the best performance. There is no one-size-fits-all approach, so tips for making great paper airplanes include testing wing edges, making sure the plane is balanced on each side, and experimenting with wing shape and angle.

Directions: Take any piece of paper (even recycled paper or this piece of paper we made in paper airplanes). You can design your own paper airplane or follow the steps for these directions below for the real design. You can then change and make improvements after you test out your plane in flight.

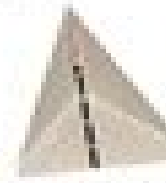

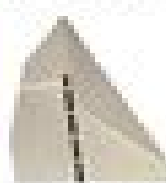

INSTRUCTIONS

1.1 Begin by laying the sheet of paper flat on a smooth surface, such as a table or desk. Fold the paper vertically.

2.1 Crumple the paper so it is flat. Fold each corner until the top reaches the center line. Repeat until the paper does not go over the center line.

3.1 Fold the paper in half so the corners

4.1 Fold the plane in half so the corners

National Paper Airplane Day

Today is May 26th and it is National Paper Airplane Day! It is the simplest yet interesting art of making and flying paper airplanes. It was first by a group of all ages, but why are paper airplanes so important, and why are they so loved?

National Paper Airplane Day is a time to celebrate the joy of paper airplanes. It is a time to use their imaginations to create a simple design in a way of having fun and flying paper airplanes brings people together to fly and not only fun to make and fly but also serve as a symbol of freedom.

Origami: The history of paper airplanes dates back 2,000 years ago. It was first found in China during the early days of paper making. These planes were made of paper and looked more like kites than airplanes. Leonardo da Vinci's designs were larger and looked like real wings. The first of the modern airplanes, created models to test and change. During World War I and World War II, paper airplanes were used to test and relieve stress, while children on the home front crafted paper airplanes. After World War II, in 1946, the first paper airplane was launched at a school, and a world record for the longest flying paper airplane was set. Today, students still test out their designs to see how to better craft, design and improve.
