

Second year tree management

Quickly fill their allotted spaces

During the second year, the trees will fill their allotted spaces on the trellis.

Mark a few beds if you want to create more trellises on the border.

Trim the branches and side shoots of the top half of the border and the trees in the rows. Remove any shoots growing inside the 'V' and allow the lower side shoots and the tree to grow.

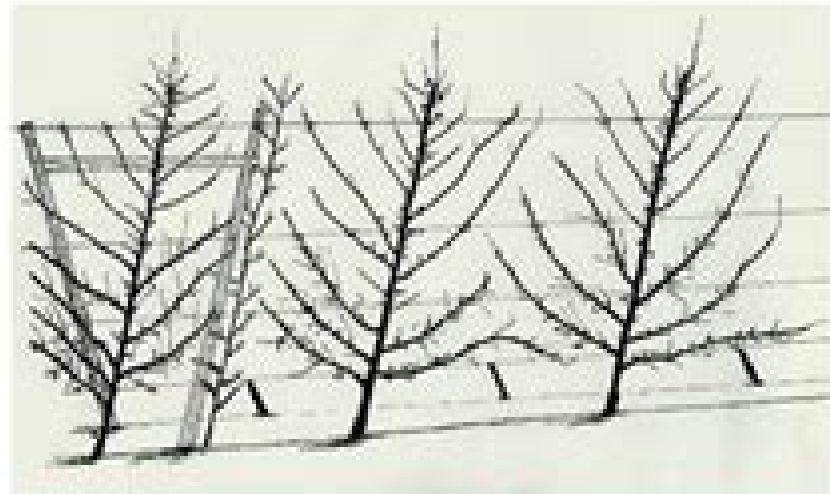

Do not bend the border.

At the end of the season you have more open, bushier trees. The top have continued to grow in balance with the roots and do not need pruning in winter.

The best way to control these two regions and achieve optimum production is:

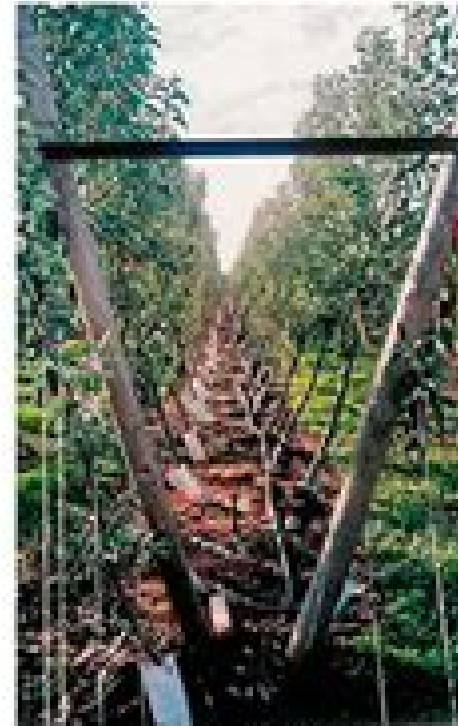

- To produce primary year young trees in winter for as long as possible, and
- Only bend the trees in late spring when they have reached a height of 10% of the width of the rows. In this way you avoid side shoot shading.
For example, if the rows from tree to tree (across the row) are 4.5 m wide (see last page 12), the height of the tree canopy in winter should be 0.45 m, measured vertically.
- Crop your trees according to their size and region. As a guide, a ton of sustainable yields for high density apple orchards in Australia is here (page 17).

Depending on region, your trees may be able to produce an average of 20 apples per tree (2.0 kg). However, if you happened to have planted small trees, the heavily managed to keep good looking branches you must remove all that to encourage good growth in the second year.

After two years in the orchard, your trees have filled their spaces on the trellis. The bottom half of the trees have opened up and some spurs have also developed along the border. The pollinator trees are also begun their growth. Only one side of the trellised row is shown.

These Granny Smith trees on A20208 produced 15 kg offshoot 12 months after the trees were planted.
