Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease.
 They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group remained sedentary, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week.
 The training program included aerobic and strength exercises. The physical health of the subjects was assessed using a variety of measures, including heart rate, blood pressure, and body composition. Psychological health was assessed using a questionnaire that measured stress, anxiety, and mood. The results of the study showed that the experimental group experienced significant improvements in physical health and psychological well-being compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for improving the health of sedentary middle-aged men.
