

back in Africa; she carried her children on her back, not pushing them from one place using a cart as she referred to the stroller. She had the opinion that, unlike back home where concern was more on caring for pregnancy and the mother, in the U.S., more time and money were allocated to acquire items, which were needed by the baby.

With her first six children I included, she felt that the surrounding culture in Africa benefited them, with a native language, Christian values found in school, church and the community. Back, in Africa, not only were we able to make friends rapidly, but parents befriended the other parents and sometimes, they were considered as part of the family (Greenhow, 2010). Here in the United States, my youngest sister, Kate, has gone through a starkly different experience. Before Kindergarten, she only spoke Swahili in the house, watched minimal TV and asked for little. She made her best friends in the church, especially the few that spoke Swahili as she was encouraged by her parents. I only had few memories regarding Kate's interaction with the children that came to our Holiness church. She always emphasized the rest of her children's strength in their grounding back in Malawi, as well as our strength in numbers.

However, as she enters fourth grade, my mother has begun to worry more about her. Being raised almost as an only child because of the new environment she was born in, my mother feels that she possesses a more American outlook towards life. Kate also finds difficulty when socializing compared to us since my parents worry about her safety, when she goes visiting at a friend's house or playing outside. A good example of a difference between American parents and African parents is their lack of concern for making friends with the parents of their children's playmates. Kate is also increasingly influenced by fashion trends, unlike us who wear African apparel most of the time. The strength of growing up

Handbook of Marriage and the Family Marvin B. Sussman, Suzanne K. Steinmetz, Gary W. Peterson, 2013-06-29 To know where we are going as scholars educators and practitioners in the field of marriage and family life we first need to know where we have been A perusal of early texts on marriage and family life provides some thought provoking insights into the accuracy of the saying what goes around comes around It is interesting to note who has been considered to be in a position to provide information on marriage and family life Included in the eclectic collection of texts we reviewed were ministers whose focus was on spirituality doctors who emphasized medical aspects of child and adult health and public health professionals and home economists concerned with fighting disease who emphasized cleanliness order fighting germs and eliminating rodents and insects There are also philosophers who drew from ancient texts when discussing family life and a count who assembled a group of German intellectual elites to address various topics An insightful essay of this type is by Marta Karlweis 1926 in which she notes There is no other fetish that society holds to so firmly as the conception woman with all its usual associations of infantilism and dependence The child requires protection is a minor and consequently a serf but above all it possesses no spiritual existence Neither doctorates or other distinctions nor the right to vote have as yet been able to dispel this sweet idea of the childishness of woman which man cherishes p

Politics of Memory and Oblivion in the European Context Viktorija L.A. Čeginskas, Sigrid Kaasik-Krogerus, Nina Säaskilahti, 2021-11-29 This book provides novel and critical insights into the complex relationship between politics of memory and oblivion in European countries in the 20th and early 21st centuries as well as the cultural political and institutional backgrounds against which they function It explores the uses of the past in terms of a conscious choice to either reactivate or overlook memories as selective reference points for the promotion and legitimation of contemporary political goals The chapters of this volume bring together theoretical discussions on the interrelationship between remembrance and purposeful oblivion as active processes that serve particular interests and ideologies in the present By addressing the diverse meanings given to practices of memory the contributions offer new perspectives on how institutions shape cultural memory power relations and identity projects Politics of Memory and Oblivion in the European Context Critical Perspectives will be of interest to scholars and graduate students from the fields of memory studies heritage studies cultural studies history and political science who engage with the legacies of violent and traumatic pasts post colonial contexts societal transition and reconciliation The chapters in this book were originally published as a special issue of the journal European Politics and Society
