Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to examine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city. The study included 100 participants, all of whom were 65 years of age or older. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. The study found that the exercise group had significantly better physical and psychological health than the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The study also found that the exercise group had significantly better quality of life than the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The study concluded that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact exercise program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults and improve their quality of life.
