

History of Environmental Literature and Criticism

Environmental literature and criticism have evolved significantly over time, reflecting changing perspectives on the relationship between humans and the natural world. This section explores the historical context and key figures in the field.

The roots of environmental literature can be traced back to ancient times, where nature was often personified or used as a metaphor. In the modern era, the Romantic movement of the 19th century emphasized the beauty and power of the natural world, influencing writers like William Wordsworth and John Keats. The 20th century saw the rise of environmentalism as a social movement, which in turn inspired a new wave of environmental literature. Key figures in this movement include Rachel Carson, whose book Silent Spring (1962) exposed the dangers of pesticides, and Aldo Leopold, whose Sand County (1949) explored the interconnectedness of all life. The field of environmental criticism emerged in the 1970s and 1980s, focusing on the cultural and political aspects of environmental issues. This section will delve into the historical context and key figures in the field, exploring the evolution of environmental literature and criticism over time.
