for a fraction of a second. A brake wheel has less friction in the rear wheel than a leading wheel.

The ABS controller can receive the pressure from the master cylinder to the wheel a fraction of a second later. Therefore, if a wheel starts to lock up, the purpose of the ABS system is to pulse the brake on and off to maintain directional stability with maximum braking force. Many ABS units will cause the brake pedal to pulse if the car is working in the ABS mode. The pulsating brake pedal is a cause for concern to some drivers. However, the pulsating brake pedal indicates the driver that the ABS is being activated. Some ABS units use an indicator valve in the ABS unit to prevent brake pedal pulsations during ABS operation. With these types of systems, it is often difficult for the driver to know if and when the ABS unit is

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTION

How Do Adjustable Pedals Work?

Adjustable pedals, also called electrically adjustable pedals (EAP), allow the brake pedal and the accelerator pedal to move forward and rear when operated. A typical electrically-actuated system includes the following components:

- Adjustable pedal position switch, which allows the driver to position the pedals.
- Adjustable pedal assembly, which includes the motor, electrical adjustment rods, and a pedal position sensor (ABS module).

The position of the pedals, as well as the position of the seat system, is usually included as part of the memory seat function and can be set for two or more drivers.

warnings control processing wheel. ABS (FIGURE 7) is an extension of a typical ABS on a rear-wheel drive vehicle.

Another variation of normal ABS unit operation is the addition of the hydraulic pressure pump used by many ABS units. In some ABS units, the foot pedal pump is run every time the vehicle is started and moved. Other types of units operate constantly or when near the pressure in the system falls for the pump to operate.

FEDERAL BRAKE STANDARDS

The federal primary or alternative brake systems are part of the Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standards (FMVSS) administered by the United States Department of Transportation (DOT). Federal rules only apply to specific components within the brake system. The control valve and parking brake systems are not under standard 101.

FMVSS 105 was first mandated on September 1, 2000, for passenger vehicles, and September 1, 2001, for multipurpose vehicles, trucks, and buses with a gross vehicle weight rating (GVWR) of 11,770 pounds (5,350 kilograms). Its purpose is to "ensure safe braking performance under normal and emergency conditions." FMVSS 105 applies to "passenger vehicles, multipurpose passenger vehicles, trucks, and buses."

FMVSS 105 deals with brake system safety by establishing specific brake performance requirements. It does not dictate the design of the system, although some requirements may make other technologies impractical or obsolete. Only four parts of the brake system are specifically required:

- Fluid reservoir and leading
- Secondary warning lights
- A method of automatic adjustment
- A mechanically engaging, friction-type parking brake system

The FMVSS 105 tests are used by manufacturers to verify the braking performance of all new vehicles available for public purchase.

FMVSS 105 BRAKE TEST

The coast-to-coast FMVSS 105 brake test procedure consists of six to 10 steps, depending on the vehicle's configuration and loading system. The actual performance tests are made with the vehicle loaded to both the manufacturer's specified gross vehicle weight rating (GVWR) and the lightly loaded vehicle weight (LTVW), with certain specified brake forces. There are general instructions for every step of the test, including the number of times the tests should be repeated, the sequence of the testing, and the acceptable stopping distance for the particular type of vehicle from a sequence of the testing procedure results.

- General Procedure. The brake test is performed by making ABS stops from 60 mph (97 km/h) at a fixed rate of deceleration, but with a controlled rate-of-deceleration after each stop. The procedure conditions the friction material.
- Adhesion (Traction) Torque Wheel Method. For vehicles not equipped with ABS, the test is to determine if the brake system will make adequate use of the road surface in stopping the vehicle.
- Good Effectiveness. The test is performed to determine if the vehicle will have sufficient stopping power when the brake is fully released and not subjected to jammed stops.
- High Speed Effectiveness. This test is performed to determine if the brake system will provide adequate stopping power for all loading conditions. The allowable stopping distance is either based from the maximum speed the vehicle can attain.
- Stops With the Engine Off. The test is for vehicles equipped with brake power assist units. The vehicle, loaded to GVWR, must stop within 600 ft (183 m) from a speed of 60 mph (97 km/h). The test must be repeated six times.
- Anti-lock Operational Failure. The test ensures that vehicle brakes will function correctly in the event of an anti-lock failure. Some tests, such as the brake system warning indicator is self-actuated when an ABS electrical function failure occurs.
- Variable Brake Proportioning System. The test is performed on vehicles equipped with either a mechanical or an electronic variable proportioning system. It ensures that, in the event of a failure, the vehicle can still come to a stop in an acceptable distance.
- Hydraulic Circuit Failure. The test is performed to ensure that the driver will be alerted to the brake warning system indicator that a failure has occurred, and that the vehicle can still be stopped in an acceptable distance.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTION

Do the FMVSS 105 Standards Apply to Replacement Brake Pad Performance?

No. The Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 105 applies to new vehicles. Replacement parts used during a brake repair or replacement may or may not permit the vehicle to achieve the same standards as when new.

To help ensure the new braking performance, the service technician should always use quality brake parts from a known manufacturer.

- Brake Power Assist (BAP) Inspection. The test ensures that the service brake can stop the vehicle in an acceptable distance with the brake power assist unit in an hydraulic state. It is performed on vehicles with brake power assist only turned off or inoperative.
- Stopping Ability. The parking brake stops will hold the vehicle stationary in either the forward or reverse direction at a 20% grade for a period of at least 5 minutes.
- Brake Road Test. This procedure tests the brake system by making a series of 10 stops from a high speed. The vehicle is loaded to GVWR, with equal communication between each stop to maintain cooling the brakes.
- Test Performance. After the brake system has been loaded by a series of controlled stops, the test performance test is immediately performed. The vehicle is loaded to GVWR and two stops are made. The stopping distance must be within acceptable limits as specified in the test. The test ensures that the brake system on the vehicle will not lose following a series of high-speed stops at GVWR.

Although these tests may seem extreme, these tests are only a minimum standard of performance. Any brake repair work should also have the brake system capable of meeting FMVSS 105.

BRAKE REPAIR AND THE LAW

Once an automobile leaves the factory, the responsibility for maintaining the designed-in level of operating performance falls on the owner of the vehicle. Owners tend to ignore maintenance to service their brake systems. Many times have you had repairs made over a long period with repairs. These tests may find one or more defects, but they may require special training to locate technicians, or special business practices when selling brake work. In some cases, the tests provide the consumer with specific warranties and the right to create additional claims of defective or substandard repairs.

Regardless of whether there are specific laws governing brake work, a technician is always liable for damage or injuries resulting from repairs performed in an unprofessional or unworkmanlike manner. Considering the time and property that depend on good brakes, there is only one acceptable goal when making brake system repairs: to restore the system and its component parts to the perform to original specifications. In other words, the repair goal is to restore the ride performance.
