

Empirical Method in Legal Research

*Chandra Shekhar Khadka

1. Introduction

Etymologically the term 'research' is from a French word 'recherche' meaning 'to search' and a Latin word 'circare' meaning 'to go round in a circle'.¹ Research is a process in which a person observes the phenomena again and again from different dimensions and collects the data and on the basis of analyzing the data draws some conclusions. Research is oriented towards the discovery of relationship that exists among phenomena of the world in which we live.² Research is indispensable tool for enhancing knowledge, improving quality of life, all round progress of human society, scientific and technological progress and searching for truth and creating new ideas. As research is a vast, multi-dimensional subject concerning innovation, solution to complex problems, addition of new knowledge and techniques ordinary definitions of research can be inadequate. Human knowledge works at two levels, at the primary level it functions as the basis of useful human activities and at the secondary level knowledge is employed to obtain increments in the existing knowledge. Research is vast and multi-dimensional concept that ordinary definitions can't project its meaning completely. Research is endless quest for knowledge or unending search for truth.³ Black's Law Dictionary has not defined the term research rather it has defined research
