

Anne of Green Gables [5]

By Jody Johnston Davidson

Female | High School 14-18, Kids & Juniors 5-13 | Duration: 1-2 minutes

About the play: Anne of Green Gables is based on the novel's namesake by Anne Shirley. The play is a short 90 minutes that focus on the main character defining moments of the play. Brother and sister Marilla and Matthew are looking to foster a boy to help with work around the house, but quite unexpectedly, Anne is sent to help them. Boisterously loud and wiry, Anne charms the brother and sister into keeping her around. She gets into quite some mischief, accidentally giving her best friend Diana wine while they are having tea, fending off the advances of Gilbert, the boy in school who fancies her, and practically drowning in a boat attempting to reenact the Lancelot story and the death of his lover, Elaine. The endearing qualities of Anne come to life to warm the audience's hearts in this picturesque coming-of-age story.

Time: The turn of the twentieth century.

The scene: Anne has invited over her friend Diana for tea. During this monologue, Anne has accidentally given Diana wine instead of cordial, and Diana gets increasingly more intoxicated. Concurrently, Anne tells the story of a pudding sauce that she was supposed to watch while cooling on the porch. Anne was too distracted playing out her favorite stories while the pudding cooled, that a mouse got inside, spoiling it. She forgot to let anyone know not to eat it until it was almost too late.

Anne : Did I tell you what happened last Sunday when the minister was invited for dinner? Marilla thought it would be a nice gesture if we had the minister over for lunch after the Sunday service. She asked me to put the pudding sauce outside ...

(The middle section of this monologue has been omitted for preview purposes.)

... slice for the minister and covered it with the tainted sauce. I wrestled with my conscience. He raised the fork to his mouth and... and... I leapt up in my place and shrieked, "Aaaaah! You mustn't eat that. A mouse drowned in the pudding sauce!"
