

ANNUAL GARDENS

ANNUALS ARE SHORT-LIVED, ALLOWING GARDENERS PLANNING and freedom when planning their gardens. While trees and shrubs form the permanent structure or the 'bones' of the garden, and perennials and grasses occupy the spaces between them, annuals add bold patterns and bright spots of color. Include annuals anywhere that you would like a new splash of color—in pots staggered up porch steps or on a deck, in window boxes, in hanging baskets. Even well-established gardens are brightened by the touch of annual flowers.

Annuals are perfect for filling in bare spots around small or large shrubs or between perennials that bloom late in the season. Annual vines can create a temporary screen to hide unsightly areas or an unsatisfactory part of the garden. When planning your garden, consult as many sources as you can for advice, and make a list of the plants you would like to include in your garden.

gathers will require somewhat less social sensitivity and grace.

size and shape of the whole plant, its leaves, including a variety of tree and plant sizes, shapes and colors will make your garden more interesting. Consult the Quick Reference Chart on pp. 182-87 to help you.

...differently. The confining blue and green—so warm, relaxing, so intimate and so agreeable and beautiful—of the small garden appear large to the outside—red, orange and yellow.

If you have time to create your garden only in the evenings, consider pale colors. White and yellow show up well at dusk and even at night. Some plants have flowers that open only in the evenings, others with a fragrance that further enhances the evening garden. Moonflower (Ophelia spp.) is a twining plant with large, white, fragrant flowers that open when the sun sets.

Some animals are drawn more by their appealing or colorful designs and can look particularly attractive in mixed hanging baskets and planters. Some foliage plants, such as coleus, are so striking that they can be used on their own as specimens, either, such as dusty miller, provide an interesting contrast to brightly colored flowers. Use animals carefully to produce the matching contrasts with the plants.

Texture is another element to consider when planning a garden. Both flowers and foliage have a visual texture. Large leaves appear coarser, making a garden seem softer and more shaded. Coarse-textured flowers look bold and dramatic, and can be seen from a distance. Small leaves appear fine, creating a sense of increased space and light. Fine-textured flowers look softening and even a bit mysterious. Some animals have fleshy and leathery foliage with interesting textures. Using a variety of textures helps make a garden interesting and appealing.
