

Significant Zeros

Significant zeros are significant in a measurement, and which are not simply placeholders?

Why

When reading a measurement, it is important to know which digits are not measurements and significant and which are. Not all zeros are not measurements. However, zeros that are before, between or at the end of a number are not. For example, 1000 g has four significant figures, but 1000. g has five significant figures. Zeros at the end of a number are not measurements, but they are significant.
