O. Baker,Kei-Hoi Cheung,2007-04-14 The rapid growth of the Web has led to the proliferation of information sources and content accessible via the Internet While improvements in hardware capabilities continue to help the speed and the flow of information across networked computers there remains a major problem for the human user to keep up with the rapid expansion of the Web information space Although there is plenty of room for computers to help humans to discover navigate and integrate information in this vast information space the way the information is currently represented and structured through the Web is not easily readable to computers To address this issue the Semantic Web has emerged It envisions a new information infrastructure that enables computers to better address the information needs of human users To realize the Semantic Web vision a number of standard technologies have been developed These include the Uniform Resource Identifiers URI for identifying objects in the Web space as well as Resource Description Framework RDF and Web Ontology Language OWL for encoding knowledge in the form of standard machine readable ontologies The goal is to migrate from the syntactic Web of documents to the semantic Web of ontologies The leading organization for facilitating developing and promoting these Web based standards is the World Wide Web Consortium W3C <http://www.w3.org>
