

Bud, Not Buddy

INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF CHRISTOPHER PAUL CURTIS

Christopher Paul Curtis was born on May 30, 1953, in Flint, Michigan, a place that would later become the setting of some of his most famous works. He was born to Dr. Elmer Curtis and Linda Jane Curtis, and is the second oldest of four siblings. While Curtis was growing up, his father practiced poultry for some time before ultimately beginning a job at an assembly line for better pay. It wasn't too long before Curtis followed his lead. After graduating from Flint Southwestern High School in 1972, Curtis enrolled at the University of Michigan's Flint campus and applied for a job at Fisher Body Plant No. 1 General Motors assembly facility. This allowed Curtis to make decent pay, which went towards paying for his part-time degree (which he received in 2000). As the assembly line, Curtis set up his work schedule so that he and his colleagues would each work 30 minutes before alternating. Curtis would then use his "free" time to read novels and combat his boredom by writing while on the job. After working a series of other low-paying jobs, Curtis took the year off from working in 1980 to focus on writing what would eventually become The Watsons Go to Birmingham—1963. For this debut novel, Curtis won a Newbery Honor Award in 1996. More books followed, as well as more honors and literary awards such as the Coretta Scott King Award for his next novel, Bud, Not Buddy. Curtis remains a prolific writer and continues to write historical fiction with young African American protagonists for a young adult audience. He currently resides in Ontario, Canada, with his children and wife.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

The events of Bud, Not Buddy take place in 1936, during the worst economic crisis in U.S. history: the Great Depression. It began with the stock market crash of 1929 in which millions of people lost their investments. It was followed by sharp declines in consumer spending and investments, which led to a decline in Gross Domestic Product (economic output) and a consequent decline in employment as companies reacted by laying off workers. At its worst, about 15 million Americans were unemployed and about half of American banks had failed. Makeshift towns called "Hoovervilles," like the one in Bud, Not Buddy, sprung up all over the country as a response to the subsequent surge in homelessness. They were shanty towns, named after President Hoover, that the homeless constructed mostly out of crates, cardboard, and scrap metal. Many of these communities were concentrated around soup kitchens, so those living there could have access to meals. The economy recovered in the 1940s thanks in large part to military spending, and many of these temporary settlements were destroyed after.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

The Watsons Go to Birmingham—1963 was Curtis's first book. It won two critical accolades as well as the Golden Kite Award, A Newbery Honor, and a Coretta Scott King Honor. Like Bud, Not Buddy, The Watsons Go to Birmingham—1963 is a work of historical fiction told from the perspective of a 10-year-old African American boy. While Bud's experiences happen within the economic instability of the Great Depression, the Watsons have to navigate the American South during the Civil Rights Movement and in the aftermath of the South Street Baptist Church bombing that happened in Birmingham in 1963. Many of the themes that Bud, Not Buddy deals with are also present in the novel, such as race, home, and community. Both novels are coming-of-age stories about a young African American boy learning about the world as he learns about himself. Unsurprisingly, many of Curtis's works are told from the viewpoint of a young African American boy: another noteworthy work, Newbery Honor book, and Coretta Scott King winner is Edgar of Ruston, which Curtis wrote in 2007. Another work of historical fiction, the book follows an 11-year-old boy who is the first freed person born in a refugee camp made up of former runaway slaves in Britain Canada. In 2012, Curtis also published The Mighty Miss Malone, a book about the character Deza Malone (who first appeared in Bud, Not Buddy), her family, and her experiences navigating the uncertain times of the Great Depression.
