LESSON JUSTIFICATION

Who are my students? (Student information, interests, and needs specific to the content of this lesson)

- This is for a team sports course. The class consists of juniors and seniors. They should have a slight understanding of how to dribble and pass a ball.

What conditions/ limitations might impact the planning and delivery of the lesson?

- Students may not have proper footwear for this activity. There are also two students who have EBD and may need more attention to stay focused and on task.

What are you teaching?

- We are teaching the game of basketball. Today, the goal is to teach students how to dribble and pass. The outcome of this unit is to teach students the game as a whole so they feel comfortable playing it for a lifetime.

Why do students need to know this content?

- Basketball is a common sport played in countries all over the world. It is also common to play in public spaces for adults, so knowing these strategies can allow them to play in their future. This will be a resource for them to be active throughout their life and feel confident joining a game.

Why did I select the instructional strategy(ies) utilized in this lesson? Provide a research/theory connection to support the instructional strategy.

- We are providing them with multiple instructional strategies. They watch a video to incorporate the idea of visual learning. This allows them to watch the rules. They also hear the rules, which applies to their auditory learning. They then practice the skills and rules, which is a physical and hands-on learning technique.

How does this lesson connect with and build on previous/subsequent lesson(s)?

- Students had a basketball unit during their 10th grade course. They also have done activities such as soccer that also involve dribbling and passing skills.
