Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life (HRQL) of patients with heart failure (HF). Methods: A total of 100 patients with HF were recruited from a tertiary care hospital and randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise program or a control group. The exercise program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes, and included both aerobic and resistance training. The control group received standard medical care. All participants completed a series of questionnaires at baseline and at 12 weeks, including the Minnesota Living with Heart Failure Questionnaire (MLHFQ), the EuroQOL-5D, and the SF-36. Results: At baseline, there were no significant differences in HRQL between the two groups. At 12 weeks, the exercise group showed significant improvements in MLHFQ, EuroQOL-5D, and SF-36 scores compared to the control group. Conclusion: A 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program significantly improved the HRQL of patients with HF.
