Why Study Economics?

The natural inclination of understanding how to be better as fully people encompasses their capacity to make good market decisions that affect the economy. In addition, economists analyze structural policies such as monetary policy of the “feds” (Federal Reserve), budget and federal budget deficits. The knowledge gained in this course will enable you to be a more capable and successful participant in an ever-changing global economy.

The primary of economics focus directly on the rationality of behavior of the individual agents in their roles as consumers, profit producers, producers and others in the market. They study individual and institutional behavior and decisions, before emphasizing, a broader economic understanding of how the economy works and the consequences of each for the economy and its growth and well-being.

One of the most important things to remember this year: learning economics is like learning a language. Until you learn to think economically, you will struggle to making conclusions and drawing graphs. Once equipped to think economically, you will begin to understand economics.

What is our Purpose?

Students are understanding of economic principles that apply to the business world:

- individual behavior (theory, both rational and irrational), within the business system.
- Human behavior (in markets).
- Government in promoting efficiency and equity.

Students are understanding of economic principles that apply to the business world (in theory), including:

- optimal output and price levels (microeconomics).
- Government and business decisions.
- The business cycle (both in the role of policy, including both micro and macro).
- The public sector: how to use the tools of government and business.
- Institutions (both micro and macro) and the role of policy, including both micro and macro.
- Government (macro).
- International economics.
